Tickets with a resale cap.

For student events and small venues.

A resale policy stops at the checkout.

A club can set a resale price in its own app.
Once a ticket moves elsewhere, that policy needs a way to travel with it.

The test case

€25.00 face price

€27.50 allowed resale

€60.00 asking price refused

Buy it. Resell it within the cap.

The organizer sets the cap and royalty.

A fan buys, lists or cancels a listing.

The ticket and payment move together.

Actual Solana devnet transaction. The €60 listing fails; the seller keeps the ticket.

The rule is checked outside our website.

Token-2022 calls the hook when a ticket moves.
A direct send is refused, even if its holder signs it.

Test the transfer rule

A direct transfer should fail, even when you sign it. Your ticket stays in this account.

Try sending it directly

Transfer blocked. This ticket can only change hands through Fairtix, so the price cap holds.

The marketplace owns escrow.
It checks the asking price, then splits payment and delivers the ticket in one transaction.

A failed payment rolls it all back.

Software upgrades and cash side deals remain possible. The demo claims neither immutability nor perfect anti-scalping.

3% on primary sales. 2% on resales.

The organizer chooses a resale royalty of up to 10%.
Buyers pay the displayed price, with no added buyer fee.

Example event	Volume	Fairtix	Resale royalty
Primary sales	400 × €15.00	€180.00	-
Resales	80 × €18.00	€28.80	€72.00
Total		€208.80	€72.00

Assumptions: one 400-ticket event; 20% resale rate; 20% price cap; 5% organizer royalty. No observed revenue.

One club event before a public rollout.

First pilot to seek

A WHU student club with a general-admission event.

Use one event to check whether fans complete a resale and organizers find the cap and royalty worth adopting.
